

June 13th 62. Love & many thanks for everything. I am
Dear Mario, delighted = fruchtbar.

I just got your letter with the good news that H. Bill Bartley is in (very many thanks indeed - it takes a load off my mind, because he was so unhappy) and with you very impressive list of credentials.

As you probably know I am not a person of any influence (for example, Imperial College of London University is ~~considering~~ establishing a chair in the History of Science but I have never heard a word of it officially, ~~and~~ ~~and~~ was never consulted; similarly University College is filling Herbert Dingle's old chair and ~~did~~ ^{does} not consult me). Yet one never knows: I may have an unexpected opportunity to do something, and I shall certainly do my best not only if and when there is an opportunity, but also if there is none (that is, I shall try to create an opportunity if there is an opportunity of creating one!) If anybody wants a philosopher of science, he cannot do better than getting you: this is clear and distinct and self-evident!

My own feeling is this: should a real opportunity offer, then you ought to accept it even if Martha has not yet completed her degree: she can get it somewhere ~~else~~ else, and studying a little longer & has never done any harm to anybody. But, of course, it would have to be a really worth-while offer.

We are leaving next week for Europe - I am giving two lectures in Saarbrücken.
Yours ever
Karl.
